Ben Taub Receives ACR Accreditation

(Houston, TX) The Harris County Hospital District's Ben Taub General Hospital was granted continued accreditation, a three-year term, in Ultrasound by the American College of Radiology (ACR).

ACR accreditations, granted for the achievement of high practice standards, demonstrate a facility's commitment to patient safety and quality care.

To receive accreditation, radiology practices must undergo a rigorous peer review process. Field experts, including board-certified doctors and medical physicists, evaluate a facility's equipment and staff qualifications. Findings are then reported to the ACR's Committee on Accreditation, which grants accreditation if merited.

The Harris County Hospital District is the fifth largest public metropolitan healthcare system in the nation. It includes three hospitals—Ben Taub General Hospital, Lyndon B. Johnson General Hospital and Quentin Mease Community Hospital; a network of 12 community health centers; a dental center; 13 satellite homeless shelter clinics; seven school-based clinics; and four mobile health units.
